

Media training for senior executives

Thursday, 9 May 2019 | BSA, London WC2

The reputation of your society is one of your major business assets. Particularly in a crisis, the way that you handle the media can make the difference between enhancing your society's reputation and losing it. In the good times, communicating with the media is still one of the most effective ways of getting your message across to a large audience.

This one-day programme will give participants a framework to understand how to navigate the media. Delegates will gain practical experience of preparing for and handling broadcast interviews, including those caused by crises. At the end of the day you will communicate with more authority and personal credibility, be able to pitch your message at the right level and achieve a more successful outcome. It's not just about media training but gaining media confidence.

The programme is aimed at non-executive directors and senior leaders in the building society sector. No previous media experience is necessary.

Due to the high costs of hiring external expertise, we're only able to run this course if we receive confirmed registrations from 5 attendees.

Course presenter:

Tom Maddocks is the founder and course director of Media Training Associates. He moved into media-training a decade ago, after more than 20 years as a journalist and broadcaster. Over his media career he worked in TV, radio and the national media. He spent five years as a reporter on BBC 2's The Money Programme.

Today he works with individuals and groups, often at CEO/Board level. His clients span many leading UK and European companies and include one of the UK's leading business schools.

Tom has also undertaken media training in the building society sector.

He is the author of a book entitled The M-Factor: Media confidence for business leaders and managers which was published in 2013.
